To whom it may concern:

I, like many other Americans, am distressed at what is happening at the Post Office. I perused the 10 year plan and found it distinctly lacking. There is always a push for efficiency, streamlining, etc, but I did not find this plan to do that. The plan seems couched in those clothes but disguising another goal. Frankly I was alarmed.

There seems to be an agenda happening at the Post Office that I can't quite grasp. As a senior citizen I vote by mail and before the election there seemed to be deliberate sabotage of my ability to cast a ballot. I also rely on the Post Office for medications, bills, etc. My local Post Office employees were also greatly distressed, feeling they were being undermined and devalued. All of them would get on a horse and deliver the mail if they had to, they are that dedicated. Yet the reports of those blue mailboxes being picked up, (which I often rely on), the sorting machines being dismantled, hours being shortened. The workers told me that they were way behind all the time.

Now there seems to be another agenda to actually sabotage the Post Office so that we don't use it or perhaps privatize it. I don't mind rates going up or intelligent changes being considered, but I do not think this 10 year plan does that. Like I said, I found it alarming. So I hope you will consider rethinking it, or looking behind the curtain to what the true goals are. I can't see the true goals, and that worries me.

Thank you for listening,
